Also in our news section in February, we referred to the United States Eventing Association executive director as Jo White. Her last name is actually Whitehouse. Sorry about that, Jo.

Finally, our February edition carried a small story about a new equine digestive conditioning program called SUCCEED. In extrapolating the text from the press release we were sent, wildly grand attributes were accorded to the product.

The release stated that the horse's digestive tract "absorbs essential vitamins, minerals, fats, carbohydrates and proteins from feed, fueling the horse's ability to run faster, jump higher, work harder and recover more quickly."

In our text, we attributed those wonderful abilities to SUCCEED, which, according to company president John Hall, was overstating it just a wee bit.

SUCCEED, it seems, helps a horse's digestive system do all those things. If you'd like to learn more about SUCCEED, visit the company's Web site at www.succeedDCP.com.

Those are the gaffes that have been called to our attention or that we discovered on our own. Thanks to everyone involved for being more than understanding. Our proofreading processes are always evolving, and our goal is to be perfect—no less.

Meanwhile, if you spot something in Tack 'n Togs that's incorrect, please do not hesitate to let us know. Responses, even to call an error to our attention, are one way we know features are being read. We're pleased our readers think enough of us to help keep us on our toes. 🐾
