The signs of heat exhaustion and heat stroke

Post these signs of heat-related stress in your store to help customers recognize the symptoms in their horses.

Older or poorly conditioned horses are more susceptible to heat exhaustion, but even well-conditioned horses can be affected if they're worked hard on hot, humid days. Here are some signs to watch for:

- Increase in heart and respiratory rate
- Profuse sweating
- Dull reactions or being uncoordinated
- Restlessness
- Spasms in the diaphragm or flanks
- Body temperature over 107 degrees

If the horse stops sweating altogether, collapses or goes into convulsions, the condition has progressed to deadly heat stroke and needs the immediate attention of a veterinarian.
